

Knowing

Knowing is a way
We tell our own stories,
Through straight A students
And individual glories.
We know what is said
Through words in a book,
And we know that essays
Are stronger with hooks.
And we know that two
Is greater than one,
But being in first place
Is a lot more fun.
Though, what we know is numerical,
It's not about our feelings
Or what we are like,
Rather, what colleges find appealing.
We don't know how to tell,
Others about our thoughts,
Because our schools don't teach us
How to unravel our knots.
We aren't taught to dream
Or reach for the stars,
We're taught to assimilate,
To barely touch the bar.
But don't let knowing
Be only what you're taught,
With an earth that's always spinning
While you are not.
Just know that there's more,
Than what they teach you to see,
Because your thoughts are an invisible force
Stronger than gravity.
